

FAQs

Is CBD the same as marijuana?

No. CBD is just one chemical compound found in hemp & cannabis plants. CBD is carefully extracted, refined, and has a wide range of health benefits for every mammal.

Will CBD get me high?

No. The intoxicating or psychoactive effects of marijuana are derived from the chemical compound THC. CBD is not psychoactive, is non-toxic, has no known lethal dosage, and has no abuse potential.

Will I fail a drug test while using a CBD supplement?

Overall, no you most likely will not. But It depends on the drug test. Various tests will measure different agents in your body. Because the CBD products we carry are produced from industrial hemp, there is less than .3% of THC in the products. Some have zero THC. When in doubt, you can ask those who are running the test if CBD would show up.

How long does it take to feel the effects of CBD supplements?

It varies according to how you choose to take CBD, or in what form. Tinctures and infusions absorb within a matter of minutes, while capsules can take up to 30 minutes to process.

How long do the effects last?

This varies from person to person depending on the amount you're taking, the method you're taking, and how your body metabolizes it. You can expect a longer, slower release for anything ingested and shorter, quicker effects for sublinguals and topicals.

How much should I take?

If you're relatively new to CBD and alternative wellness supplements, it's good to start with a small dosage and work your way up gradually. A dosage of 10mg twice a day is a good way to start.

For questions about our CBD products contact cheryl@aliascann.com or frank@aliascann.com